Pain. Shock follows boy's death in school with no nursing staff

After a 7-year-old child died at Andrew Jackson Elementary School on Wednesday afternoon, where no nurse was assigned, teachers' union officials have released an open letter sent to the governor's office seeking more funding to potentially prevent such disasters from occurring in the future.

The letter accuses Gov. Corbett of slashing education funding by $1 billion and pleads, "You have the power to fix what you have broken."

It was signed by Philadelphia Federation of Teachers president Jerry Jordan, American Federation of Teachers (AFT) president Randi Weingarten and AFT Pennsylvania chapter president Ted Kirsch.

"We don't know if a school nurse could have saved this young boy. But we do know every child deserves a full-time nurse in his or her school," the letter states. SAM NEWHOUSE

Young life, cut short

The 7-year-old boy who died at Jackson has not been identified.

- Reports say symptoms appeared around 2:30 p.m. Wednesday.
- Teachers gave the child CPR. He was pronounced dead at 4:30 p.m.

By the book. City denies post-collapse inspection criticisms

City Controller Alan Butkovitz released an audit Thursday saying that the city's Department of Licenses & Inspections may not have lived up to its pledge to inspect all demolitions after the Salvation Army building collapse last June.

But L&I commissioner Carlton Williams said the audit is flawed.

"We ordered inspection of all demolition sites and we did that. Our reports show that we did," Williams said. "Process issues gave rise to the misconception that the city didn't do its job, when ultimately, we did."

In the days after the June 5, 2013 collapse that killed six, Mayor Michael Nutter said that all active demolition sites would be inspected and that demolition inspection standards would be tightened.

"The work was being done," Williams said. "Of those 442 inspections, we cited numerous safety assessments to make sure that the public was protected." SAM NEWHOUSE

Criticisms

Butkovitz said 15 of 18 completed demolitions and 10 of 14 demolition permit applications were not properly documented.

- Williams said Licenses & Inspections is striving to make its data easier to read and more transparent.

By the numbers

Butkovitz's audit found that of 442 active demolition permits at that time, paperwork for inspections of 210 of them was incomplete.

Rain rain go away

Memorial Day weekend forecast: rainy

As locals gear up to head on weekend vacations or to just stay in the city and enjoy a three-day weekend, Mother Nature is planning a mix of rain and thunderstorms. But conditions should be better by Monday.

According to the National Weather Service in Mount Holly, there will be scattered showers all day on Friday, with sun in the late afternoon.

The city, especially to the north and west, should expect sporadic rain all day on Saturday.

No rain is expected Sunday and temperatures should reach the 70s.

Sunny, warm weather is expected for Monday. METRO

Meow. Cat hoarder's guilty plea stands

A cat hoarder living in the Philadelphia mansion formerly belonging to Hollywood actress Grace Kelly had a legal attempt to retract her guilty plea struck down by a judge Thursday.

Marjory Bamont, 82, who has resided in Kelly's former home in East Falls since 1973, was discovered to be illegally hoarding cats in late October.

On Oct. 31, the PSPCA executed a search warrant and recovered 14 cats, one dog and the remains of one cat. Bamont was taken to Einstein Medical Center to undergo psychiatric evaluation.

Conditions inside the former screen star's home were unsanitary, with fleas and feces everywhere in the rooms where the cats were housed. Many of the cats were malnourished and in need of medical care. The dog was also in poor condition.

Bamont was later convicted on 16 counts of animal cruelty, barred from owning animals for four years and fined $10,800. However, Bamont then appealed to overturn her original no-contest plea, claiming that she had not been in court that day, in an attempt to be able to regain custody of her cats.

According to the PSPCA, Bamont will be able to keep two of her cats. SAM NEWHOUSE

Too many cats

Hoarding often begins as a response to emotional trauma.

- Hoarders associate the act of collecting goods, possessions or small animals with positive feelings.
- However, they are unable to get rid of items, which can lead to dangerous and unsanitary conditions.

Arrested. AG: Former judge made personal calls while on the job

Former Judge Willis Berry turned himself in for arrest on Thursday after Attorney General Kathleen Kane announced charges against Berry for allegedly instructing his judicial secretary to assist him with his personal property management business from his courthouse office.

Kane claims Berry defrauded the state of $110,880 in the value of his secretary's salary for the hours she is believed to have assisted him with personal business over 10 years from 1997 to 2007.

Berry, 72, a former Court of Common Pleas judge assigned to the Criminal Justice Center, allegedly had his secretary convinced that it was her job to assist with his personal rental management business.

Berry now faces two felony corruption charges. SAM NEWHOUSE

Talks between rivals fail. Thai army chief takes power in coup

Thailand's army chief General Prayuth Chan-ocha seized control of the government in a coup on Thursday, two days after he declared martial law, saying the military had to restore order and push through reforms after six months of turmoil.

The military imposed a curfew from 10 p.m. until 5 a.m., suspended the constitution and told outgoing cabinet ministers to report to an army base in the north of the capital. Rival protest camps were ordered to disperse and media censored.

Thailand is locked in a protracted power struggle between supporters of ousted former premier Thaksin Shinawatra and opponents backed by the royalist establishment that has polarized the country and battered its economy. REUTERS

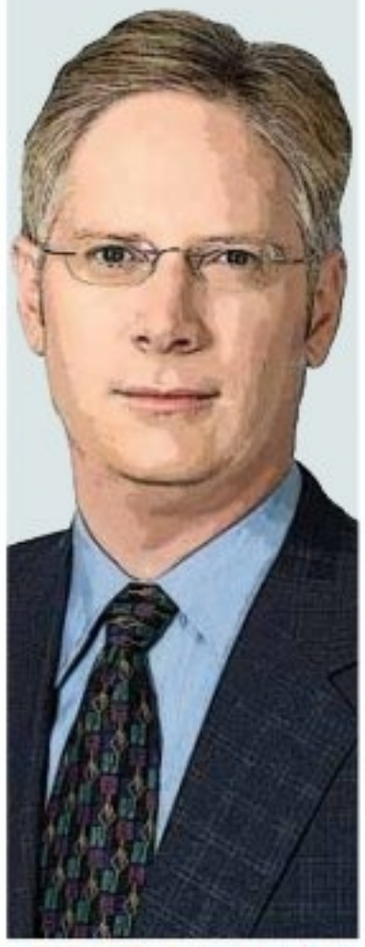
Opinion

TOM FOREMAN

FOREMAN IS A POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT FOR CNN.



CNN=POLITICS

KEEPING IT ALL IN THE FAMILY

As you read this, the population of the country is about 318 million people, according to the U.S. census. I say "about" because when you consider everyone who is being born or immigrating, the result is an extra American every 15 seconds. So if you're reading this fairly late in the day, tack on a few more folks, and you might want to order your pizza now to beat the rush.

We are the third largest country in the world by population, behind only China and India. We have a sprawling education system, ready — if expensive — access to our election process and no end of shops making cheap yard signs on demand.

So how is it that D.C. pundits are frothing like rabid possums over the possibility of another Bush-Clinton presidential clash in 2016? Somewhere in the vast pool of ambitious citizens making our daily commutes into sweaty, horn-honking hells, can we not find two people who are free of existing political dynasties?

Quoted

Can we not find two people who are free of existing political dynasties?

I'm not implying that Hillary Clinton and/or Jeb Bush are unqualified to be president. I'm sure either could find the Oval Office, manage a decent salute at the helicopter door, keep aphids out of the rose garden and maybe even help use up some of the old White House stationary that already has their names on top. What I'm saying is that it blows my mind that a nation as rich in talent as this one keeps turning to the same families for leadership, as if no one else could fill the bill.

I think this happens for three reasons. First, these people keep running. Second, the political parties keep falling in line behind who they perceive as "winners." And third, we, the voters, are lazy.

It's easier to cozy up to candidates we know than those we've yet to meet. But limiting the gene pool of politics also limits our possibilities. Maybe there are not millions of families producing souls truly capable of being president. But it is equally hard to imagine in a country as great as this, that there are only two.

Prosecutors: Boston bomber admitted to his role in attack

Death penalty. He may face execution if convicted.

The accused Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev had admitted to a role in the attack during an interrogation in hospital a day after his arrest, prosecutors said in a court filing.

That statement, and others made in the hours following Tsarnaev's arrest but before he had been informed of his rights to legal representation, should be admitted at his upcoming trial because the agents interviewing him believed there was still a risk of further attacks, prosecutors said in a series of filings late Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Boston.

While the suspect, now 20, said he and his older brother Tamerlan — who died after a gunfight with police days after the bombing attack that killed three people and injured 264 — were the only people involved in the bombing, investigators did not believe him, prosecutors said.

"Agents continued to question Tsarnaev not to extract a confession, which they already had, but because of their reasonable belief that Tsarnaev was concealing information about impending attacks, accomplices and/or the existence of additional bombs," prosecutors said.

His lawyers earlier this month argued that the statements made while Tsarnaev was hospitalized for gunfire wounds, after police found him hiding in a dry-docked boat on April 19, should not be admitted because he did not have an attorney present. REUTERS

Ukraine elections.

Pro-Russian rebels, Ukraine forces clash

A pro-Russian militant of the so-called "Eastern battalion" guards a checkpoint near the eastern Ukrainian city of Donetsk. / GETTY IMAGES

Ukraine said on Thursday its forces had rebuffed overnight attacks by armed pro-Russian separatists on an army checkpoint and a border crossing and called for an emergency session of the U.N. Security Council to discuss Moscow's role in the violence.

With tensions rising ahead of Sunday's presidential election in Ukraine, security sources said eight soldiers had been killed in fighting at the checkpoint, while some border guards were hurt when "dozens" of gunmen tried to enter Ukraine from Russia.

The election is meant to stabilize Ukraine after mass street protests toppled Moscow-backed president Viktor Yanukovich in February, but the separatists have vowed to prevent the poll going ahead in eastern towns where they have seized control. REUTERS

HUGH JACKMAN

"X-Men: Days of Future Past" is Hugh Jackman's sixth turn as Wolverine, unless you count his cameo in "X-Men: First Class."

ENJOYING IT MORE THAN EVER

Hugh Jackman has a Band-Aid on his nose. His doctor spied a bit of basal cell carcinoma on his nose and removed it. "It is a skin cancer, but if you're going to get it, it's the kind you want," he says.

But he's supposed to be talking about superstrength. Jackman is in town to promote "X-Men: Days of Future Past," based on the beloved 1981 two-issue comic, which finds the Wolverine jumping to 1973 to alter a bleak dystopian future. It's Jackman's sixth time playing the easily riled mutant Logan, aka Wolverine (seventh if you count a cameo in "X-Men: First Class"). In person, Jackman is as far from his most famous screen incarnation as possible (which is to say, very approachable and talkative). And he's not tired of Wolverine, even after 14 years.

What is it like playing the same character for so many years?
I'm weirdly enjoying it more than ever. I think the movies are getting better, and the scripts are getting better. This one is based on the comic book, but it felt really organic in the way it celebrates the whole series. I love that it's part comic-book movie, part time-travel movie. It reminds me of "Back to the Future." And I'm the only one lucky enough to play both time periods, so I got to work with everyone.

Where do you see him going in the future? Any surprising directions?
My son just saw the movie. He loved it; he just turned 14. He said, "Dad, I've got an idea for the next one. I think he should not be in any fights at all. I think he should just be a gardener, and he's kind of cool but he's really at peace." And I said, "Now, hang on. Good idea, but I think the Wolverine fans around the world want to see one little fight." He said, "No. I think we've seen enough. I think he should just be calm." [Laughs]

This was made soon after "The Wolverine," too.
I did "Prisoners" in between. That had complications, because Denis [Villeneuve, who directed "Prisoners"] didn't want a neighborhood father — who was supposed to be kind of an everyman — being completely jacked. And I was training every morning while I was shooting that. I never really told them. They kept looking at me when food was being delivered every two hours — all these chicken breasts. ... But Denis did cover me up. If you notice I'm always in long shirts. There were no T-shirts. I complained about it after awhile, but it's easier to stay in shape than to get into shape. That's an old Will Smith quote. And it's true.

Mellowing out

Logan's much more calm in this one, especially compared to how volatile he was in "The Wolverine."
He's come to a certain place in himself, about his position, about his past, about who he is. It's more about the team now. ... I think it's been well-earned, and I think after "The Wolverine" it feels natural. He gets to play a mentor/diplomat/guide/wise old sage role that doesn't have him flying off the handle every five seconds. I've been around long enough to know that this is rare: to be able to play a character you love after all these years and still feel like it's relevant, and not just old hat.

Reaching out

Jackman was a newbie to most when he was cast as Logan/Wolverine in the first "X-Men" in 2000. But he was already an established star of musicals, including playing Curly in "Oklahoma!" in London starting in 1998. Throughout, he's made a point of being versatile, doing dramas and epics and brainy thrillers, such as "The Prestige." One thing he'd like to do — or at least do more of — is romantic-comedies. "I did one, 'Kate & Leopold,' a long time ago. I'd like to do that again," he says.

Bad to the bone

Interview. Peter Dinklage insists none of the bad guys he plays, even in "X-Men," are villains.

Peter Dinklage plays a baddie who thinks he's not a baddie in "X-Men: Days of Future Past." And check out the 'stache (inset) the 1973 Dinklage sports in the film. / FILMMAGIC/ALAN MARKFIELD

Peter Dinklage is the main baddie in "X-Men: Days of Future Past," playing Dr. Bolivar Trask, a corporate type who wants to design robots to hunt and kill mutants, who he perceives as too dangerous to be living with humans. But Dinklage doesn't like the term "villain," not here or on "Game of Thrones."

"I always say the highfalutin' actor thing of not judging your villain, not seeing him as a villain," Dinklage says. "He really believes he's doing the right thing. He wants to save humankind, worldwide, at the time of the Vietnam War, one of the worst wars there was — although I guess they're all bad wars."

But good intentions, however misguided, run up against less good intentions. "He's also a capitalist. Those are the guys I don't trust: war profiteers. His containers [with the robots] have his logo on them. The guys screaming in a tree in Central Park, you get that as a New Yorker. But I don't get the guys down on Wall Street, bleeding people for a living."

Quoted

"I always say the highfalutin' actor thing of not judging your villain, not seeing him as a villain. He really believes he's doing the right thing."

Dinklage, on playing Dr. Bolivar Trask in "X-Men."

Dinklage's character gets to hobnob with another baddie of the 20th century. The film has Trask pitch his robots to Richard Nixon, played by Mark Camacho. "There's a fine line where you can easily slip into comedic territory. You can get Rich Little with it," Dinklage says. "Mark certainly didn't do that."

Dinklage even says he has a kind of history with Nixon. "My mother was an elementary school teacher for 35 years, and she taught at Nixon's school in New Jersey. I was raised a liberal Democrat, and she was protesting Nixon when he was in office. And yet we have a picture of my mother and President Nixon shaking hands."

Comics sequel.
The new 'X-Men' is not quite first class

Hugh Jackman gets to bro down with Michael Fassbender and James McAvoy in "X-Men: Days of Future Past." / ALAN MARKFIELD

The "X-Men" franchise is refreshingly inconsistent. Each film is radically different from the others — the best way to deal with an overstuffed comic. "X-Men: Days of Future Past" is even a time-travel romp, and it's nifty enough to ignore that it's a film exec's dream, bringing together all mutants, good and bad, young and old, into one scrumptious money pie.

Adapted from a beloved two-issue comic from 1981, "Days of Future Past" starts in a dystopian future where government-run robots kill mutants. In the comic, Kitty Pryde (Ellen Page) was sent into the past to stop them before they started. But neither Page nor Pryde are big enough with moviegoers who don't read the comics, so it's Hugh Jackman's grouchy Wolverine who heads to 1973, where his muttonchops are a better fit anyway. He has to convince a bitter Xavier (James McAvoy), a bitter-er Magneto (Michael Fassbender) and an outright belligerent Mystique (Jennifer Lawrence) not to kill a war profiteer (Peter Dinklage), whose death will mobilize humanity against them.

When the film concentrates on character development, director Bryan Singer's and screenwriter Simon Kinberg's deep feeling for them shines through. But as exciting as it can be, it's a character-driven comics movie that too often forgets about the characters.

Joaquin Phoenix and Marion Cotillard try to eke out a life in 1920s New York in James Gray's "The Immigrant." / THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

American close-up

Old New York. Marion Cotillard runs afoul of Joaquin Phoenix in the retro "The Immigrant."

James Gray is a classicist whose fondness for old movies — particularly old melodramas — is palpable in every frame of his films. In "We Own the Night" and "Two Lovers," he doesn't just bring old styles to the modern day. He behaves as if certain cinematic styles have never gone out of practice, because they never should have. His latest, "The Immigrant," is truly old-fashioned; it's set in 1921, and it depicts the rocky experience of those who came to our country in less pleasant times than would greet them now.

Indeed, few had it as bad as Marion Cotillard's Ewa, a Polish Catholic woman whose misfortunes start when her sick sister is turned away at Ellis Island. Ewa seems to luck out when she befriends Bruno (Joaquin Phoenix), a dapper stranger who says he can ferry her out to Manhattan. Alas, he's a dangerous pimp who ropes her into his trade, then allows her to wield some management power. She seems to find another savior in Emil (Jeremy Renner), a kindly low-rent magician, but might she just be terminally gullible?

Melodramas get a bad rap, depicted by detractors as broad and shameless. But the best — and even some of the merely pretty good — deliver nuanced characterizations and performances. All three leads gradually reveal surprising details and shifts in personality. Bruno's terror proves to be at least somewhat of a front; as in other Gray films, Phoenix's character is a wounded child playing dress-up. Ewa herself winds up more confident and even ambitious than the sad-eyed victim we meet at the start of the film.

Gray is one of the movie's stars, too, in a way. His images are weighted with purpose, inspiring fascination with the world they create and the actors they show. The cinematography by Darius Khondji ("Seven") has the old-world mustiness of classic paintings. The sets are evocative of time and place — Gray is one of the great chroniclers of New York 'hoods that too rarely are showcased onscreen — but it's the faces that haunt the most. Gray loves close-ups of faces one can stare at for hours — the faces that betray feelings better than words ever can. He understands more than most that the close-up is one of cinema's strongest powers, and he's hired three actors whose mugs are not only iconic but relentlessly human.

'The Double' tests Eisenberg principle

Work comedy.
A meek clerk finds he has a jerkish doppelganger in the grimy "The Double."

Two Jesse Eisenbergs face off against each other in "The Double." / MAGNOLIA PICTURES

Richard Ayoade's "The Double" isn't the most distinctive portrait of the workplace as purgatory. It's got some Kafka in it, plus bits of Terry Gilliam's "Brazil," where the future isn't too futuristic, retaining the grime and grit and malfunctioning doodads from another age. In that respect, it goes further than Gilliam: It seems to take place in an alternate universe that's a fantasy/nightmare Eastern Europe, one that never figured out digital technology even as its bureaucracy grew larger. Everything's rusty and dark, and the sun never comes out. It feels old-hat yet fresh — a hand-me-down vision that you've only mostly seen before.

It's both fun and maddening living in this world, especially as Ayoade likes to throw you off: Periodically the camera readjusts as though it's being wielded by a sleeping operator who kicks it between snores. It's such a palpable feeling of comic unease that it's almost too bad there's a story, albeit one based on Fyodor Dostoevsky's novella. Jesse Eisenberg at his meekest plays Simon James, a clerk at an anonymous office job. He's in love with the new girl (Mia Wasikowska), who seems like the perfect, unobtainable girl — except she hates that cliche as much as you might.

The been-there-done-that of the sensitive guy pining for the mesmerizing girl does limit "The Double" more than it should, even after it's gotten to its big hook: Into Simon James' office walks James Simon (Jesse Eisenberg), his exact double except in temperament. He's alpha male and jerkish, and more willing to do something with Waskikowska's Hannah. The battle over the girl isn't terribly engaging, even with a fighting Wasikowska. But Eisenberg's James Simon is a treat, tapping into the best parts of the actor's talents.

Ayoade seems more goosed by the unpleasant characters anyway, including his undermining superiors (Wallace Shawn and Noah Taylor). When the film is firing off dark jokes, it reminds one that Ayoade works best with the brash, not the quiet. His last film, "Submarine," gained much from having an opinionated, not just sullen, moony protagonist. One almost wants to see this same world spent on a different situation. It could even star the evil Eisenberg.

One of his better movies

Drew Barrymore and Adam Sandler have a not-so-nifty first date in "Blended." / WARNER BROS. PICTURES

Family comedy. The new Adam Sandler flick won't make you want to offer him a glass of shut-the-hell-up.

"Blended" begins with Adam Sandler taking a blind date to Hooter's. Despite being a father of three daughters, Sandler's Jim doesn't notice Lauren (Drew Barrymore) is fuming, perhaps because he's staring slack-jawed at the World's Strongest Man competition on the TV. Jokes are made, and then he breaks out the news that his wife died from cancer. That's the Sandler formula: a mishmash of bro yuks suddenly interrupted by heaping helpings of "heart." The Sandler empire has made over 20 films and it hasn't gotten better at smoothing over rough spots. They've perhaps gotten worse, because why fix what paying audiences don't think is broken?

"Blended" is one of the "better" Sandler films, which is to say it's sometimes half-tolerable. Barrymore is key: As in "The Wedding Singer," she brings out … well, not a lot in her unfailingly lazy costar, but something. Here, they're single parents who gradually fall in love when they share a family suite in a lavish African resort. (Which country they're in isn't revealed.) The machinations it takes to get them there are convoluted and nonsensical: Jim orchestrates it despite finding her a shrill, overprotective harpy.

The bulk of the film is relegated to regimented activities — safari, paragliding, ostrich riding — and to Sandler playing father figure to Barrymore's sons while Barrymore teaches Sandler's daughters to stick to gender norms. But at the heart is the budding romance, and "Blended" comes alive when their fights dissolve into flirtations, their weirdly palpable chemistry finally clicking into place. Even some of the emotional scenes are actually moving, as when Barrymore sings "Over the Rainbow" to his motherless daughters. Sandler has already played a widower, in "Reign Over Me," one of his sporadic serious ventures. You can see his Jim retreating into his man-boy shell, using goofiness and occasional hostility to mask his grief, especially from his daughters.

Or is Sandler being his usual remote and tired self? Mostly, he just seems to be in another Adam Sandler film, and when Jim uses his dead wife to drive a wedge between himself and Lauren late in the movie, it feels like a third-act plot contrivance. Frankly, that "Blended" is genuinely sweet at all is enough to overrate it.

Getting festive all around town

Ooh and ahh at Longwood Gardens' fireworks display. / LONGWOOD GARDENS

Memorial Day.
Enjoy the best of the city over the holiday weekend.

This three-day weekend is the traditional kickoff to three months full of events, entertainment and barbecues — and there's no time like the present to start enjoying summer festivities in Philly. We handpicked a few not-to-miss events.

Fireworks at Longwood Gardens

You don't have to wait until the Fourth of July to watch a great big fireworks display. Get to Longwood Gardens for a fireworks and fountain spectacle that will incorporate big band and Broadway hits. Dancing is encouraged.
Saturday, 9:15 p.m., $18-$38
1001 Longwood Rd., Kennett Square; 610-388-1000, www.longwoodgardens.org

Shopping at The Oval

Eakins Oval (also known as the Park on the Parkway) was transformed last summer into a hotspot for outdoor activities, and this year will be no different. Start your long weekend off at Phair, an open-air pop-up market. You'll find table after table of local vendors selling fine art, jewelry, crafts and more. Plus, there will be music, food trucks and a special appearance by the Victory Brew Pub on Wheels for those who want to sip and stroll.
Friday, 5-9 p.m. and Saturday noon-7 p.m., Pay as you go, The Oval, 2601 Ben Franklin Pkwy.; www.theovalphl.org

Waterfront

Glide along the river in a swan boat. / PROVIDED

Maritime Day on the Delaware River

Celebrate all things nautical during Delaware River Maritime Day. Get out on the water with free swan boat rides, kayak excursions and tours of SUNY Maritime College's training ship, the Empire State VI, which is visiting our stretch of river for the first time. Also featured are tours of the dredger ship The McFarland, plus boat races and visits from working tugboats. A memorial plaque for the Pennsylvania Nautical School, established in 1889, and Pennsylvania Maritime Academy will be unveiled.
Saturday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m., free, Great Plaza at Penn's Landing, 101 S. Columbus Blvd.; www.delawareriverwaterfront.com

Ceremony at Laurel Hill Cemetery

Sure, this is a weekend packed with cookouts and parties, but let's remember that the root of the holiday is not just to have a Monday off. Honor American soldiers at Laurel Hill Cemetery's public rededication ceremony of the bronze Silent Sentry statue. The historic Civil War monument, which was once located at Mount Moriah Cemetery, will now preside over the grave sites of Civil War veterans at Laurel Hill. Join others in the observance of Memorial Day and the ceremonial unveiling of the statue.

When an 'Idol' meets his idols (and his bro geeks out)

North Carolina's Caleb Johnson (the one in the center who ISN'T wearing makeup) was crowned the winner of Fox's "American Idol" on Wednesday night at the Nokia Theatre L.A. So who is the larger gentleman in Paul Stanley makeup? That's Johnson's brother Houston, a huge Kiss fan, obvs. Caleb Johnson defeated Michigan's Jena Irene, whose powerhouse voice shone through in her duet with Paramore on "Ain't It Fun." Other artists who performed in the finale alongside "Idol" finalists included John Legend, Jennifer Nettles, Demi Lovato, Jason Mraz and more. Unfortunately, no other sibling of a contestant dressed as any of those artists.

Miley tells JLaw to 'get it together'

Jennifer Lawrence recently stopped by "Late Night with Seth Meyers" to promote her new film, "X-Men: Days of Future Past" and in typical fashion, told Meyers and the audience an embarrassing story.

In the past, Lawrence said, she hadn't gone to any awards show after-parties, but this year she brought her best friend to the Oscars and the duo partied down. JLaw partied so hard that she threw up all over the front porch at Madonna's "big fancy party" post-Oscars.

"I was in such bad condition," the 23-year-old Oscar-winning actress said, "and I look behind me while I'm puking and Miley Cyrus is there like, 'Get it together.'"

When Miley Cyrus (she of tongue-wagging, weed-cake-eating fame) looks at you like that, that's when you know you really haven't got it together!

Quoted

"The strangest thing about watching a show that is loosely based on my life is probably seeing moments of my life that were sometimes very strange and in some cases kind of traumatic, played for laughs. Yet I am so grateful that that silver lining is possible."

Kerman

Piper Kerman, author of "Orange Is the New Black: My Year in a Women's Prison," asked during Internet Week New York about what it's like to watch Netflix's "Orange is the New Black." Blipp this to watch our exclusive video.

Talking point

Mike Myers talks Kanye/Katrina incident ... finally!

It only took nine years, but Mike Myers is chiming in on his infamous befuddlement standing next to Kanye West after the rapper said, "George Bush doesn't care about black people" during a televised Hurricane Katrina relief benefit. "For me it isn't about the look of embarrassment on my face, it is truly about the injustice that was happening in New Orleans," Myers tells GQ. "I'm the guy next to the guy who spoke a truth. I assume that George Bush does care about black people — I mean, I don't know him, I'm going to make that assumption — but I can definitively say that it appeared to me watching television that had that been white people, the government would have been there faster."

Horoscope

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20. Not everyone will share your goals. Avoid a power struggle. Before you act, decide what is acceptable.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. Rein in your tendency to be argumentative today. Don't alienate your friends with aggression and unrealistic demands. Keep your distance until you cool down.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. By traveling outside your usual area, you will meet individuals interested in hearing what you have to offer. Increase your visibility.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Things may be less than harmonious on the home front. Don't compound the problem by dredging up past differences.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21. Someone close to you will be resentful of the time you devote to work. Do your best to counter problems with a plan that will reverse the situation.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. A romantic relationship will be triggered by an event. Participate and widen your circle of friends.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20. You have to think of others in order to avoid criticism. Devote more time to people who count on you.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. Show your employer how versatile you are. By agreeing to take on extra tasks, you will boost his or her opinion of you.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20. Think before you speak. Avoid anyone who is aggressive about his beliefs. Tact will be required for group endeavors.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. You need peace and quiet today. Refuse to let friends or relatives meddle in your affairs. You can ease tension by planning alone time. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Cyclists are just the worst

OK. It has been a week now and all of these people are still harping on these bicycle riders and which way they should be riding down the road. The fact of that matter is, they shouldn't be allowed to ride on the road, period. I understand sharing the road is law (what a stupid idea), and that is why we do it, but that doesn't mean we like it. I have never in my life seen a bike rider go 35 or more miles an hour. So why should main roads that do not have little side bike lanes allow people who can't even go 20 mph to "drive" on a road with cars speeding along anywhere between 30 and 70 mph? Do you really think that after I have worked my ass off for 9+ hours a day that I want to be stuck behind some obese moron biking 10 mph in the middle of the fast lane, waiting for him or her to struggle up the hill, while the goddamn speed limit is at the very least 35 mph? Bikers have gotten greedy. It's all about, "oh, the cars, they aren't paying attention to me." Instead, how about, "thank you, cars, for allowing my slow, stupid ass to hold up law-abiding traffic while I take three hours to bike my spandex-engulfed body up the middle of a four-lane highway."

On the bench

Ruf to back up, for now

Expect Darin Ruf to be an option off the bench as opposed to a starter, according to Ruben Amaro.

The Phillies can certainly use a potent right-handed bat to pinch-hit. Ruf grounded into a double play Wednesday night against the Marlins.

Brown still down

Phillies wait for Brown to gain steam

The Phillies will remain patient with Domonic Brown, who is hitting just .211. Amaro and Sandberg have said that Brown, who blasted a monster home run against Miami on Wednesday night, will get an ample chance to find his power stroke.

Hot corner heats up

Asche coming around

Patience appears to be paying off for Cody Asche. The rookie third baseman, who has been hovering around the Mendoza line for much of the season, has picked it up recently. Asche is batting .258.

ED CONDRAN

Rollins rounds back into form

MLB. Rollins is having his best season since winning the 2007 MVP award.

Jimmy Rollins seems to have found a new home in the leadoff spot once again. / GETTY IMAGES

It's just a matter of time until Jimmy Rollins becomes the Phillies' all-time hit leader.

The Phillies veteran shortstop passed Richie Ashburn for second place on the franchise's all-time hits list with 2,218 hits when he singled against the Marlins in Thursday's matinee.

Rollins' hit and Marlon Byrd's two-run homer were the silver linings in the Phillies' 4-3 loss to Miami.

Rollins is just 17 hits from passing Mike Schmidt, who is the club leader with 2,234 hits.

"I feel really good right now," Rollins said. "I'm feeling really comfortable."

It shows. Rollins is having a strong bounce-back year.

The longest-tenured Phillie had a rough 2013. Rollins already has as many homers (six) and triples (two) as he had last season and more than half of the amount of RBIs (20) than he had during the 2013 campaign.

Forget about last season, Rollins is having his best year since 2007 when he was named NL MVP. Rollins' slugging percentage (.458) and OPS (.827) are on a par with 2007, the finest of his 15 seasons.

"I know I can still play the game at the level I'd like to play at," Rollins said.

It's not just Rollins' bat, but his defense remains top-notch, and he continues to be durable at age 35.

Rollins played in 160 games in 2013, and with the exception of 2010, has never played less than 137 games in a season.

"Jimmy Rollins is a special player," Reds second baseman Brandon Phillips said. "I'm not surprised that he turned things around. He's in great shape and he just looks like he's revitalized. Anyone that knows baseball can see Jimmy Rollins can still play."

Rollins, who remained at the top of the order with Ben Revere in the lineup Thursday, and double-play partner Chase Utley are a pair of bright spots in a maddeningly inconsistent season.

The Phillies can't string together a decent win streak. It's been more than a season since the Phillies have won four games in a row.

"We have to find a way," Rollins said. "We need to get on some kind of a roll. We have the talent. It's about us being able to figure out how to put it together."

MCW on rookie team

Sixers point guard and Rookie of the Year Michael Carter-Williams was the lone unanimous selection to this year's All-Rookie team, which comes as no surprise to those familiar with his incredible season in 2013-14. Orlando's Victor Oladipo, Utah's Trey Burke, Brooklyn's Mason Plumlee and New York's Tim Hardaway round out the first team.

Marlins 4, Phillies 3

Phillies drop finale in Miami

Cole Hamels had really good stuff Thursday afternoon, but the Phillies wasted a good outing from the lefty in a 4-3 walk-off loss to the Marlins.

The game was a pitchers' duel until the sixth and seventh innings, when the Marlins struck for three runs to take a 3-0 lead.

The Phillies came back, like they have so many times this season, using a Ryan Howard sacrifice fly and Marlon Byrd's two-run homer in the eighth to tie the game at 3.

But the Phillies bullpen played the same tune, this time Jake Diekman was the guilty party, giving up a walk-off single to Christian Yelich.

The Phillies lost the series 2-1. EVAN MACY

Phillies back to begin 11-game homestand

MLB. The Phillies host the Dodgers Friday night to begin a long stint at Citizens Bank Park.

A baseball season is a marathon not a sprint, and the Phillies will look to have short memories as they start a season-long 11-game homestand Friday when Clayton Kershaw and the Dodgers come to town for three.

The Phillies, 20-24, will have to face one of the top starters in the National League in Kershaw to open the series Friday, countering with Roberto Hernandez. In Game 2, Dan Haren will face whomever the Phillies choose to call up to fill the rotation spot left open by injured Cliff Lee, and in the 1:35 Sunday game Josh Beckett will take on A.J. Burnett.

The Phillies have a sub-.500 record at home and will need to take advantage of their time in Philadelphia to climb back up the standings — they currently trail the first-place Braves by 4½ games.

But to pick up any ground in the division, they will need a better performance from their bullpen, which ranks near the bottom in every category in the majors.

After the Dodgers leave town, the Phillies will host the Rockies for a midweek trio of games before the Mets arrive for an extended five-game series (making up for a rainout earlier this spring).

BenJarvus Green-Ellis' days as a viable fantasy option at running back are likely over. / GETTY IMAGES

VETS WHO LOST ON DRAFT DAY

Fantasy football isn't quite a zero-sum game. For every yard gained by a rookie, there isn't a full yard lost by a veteran. But anytime we add talent to an equation, there are going to be changes in the bottom line. Perhaps more importantly, the draft allows us to evaluate how coaches really feel about their players instead of reading between the coachspeak lines. These are the players who lost the most fantasy value as a result of what their team did in the draft.

Doug E. Fresh

On the clock at No. 69 overall, the Bucs had severe needs along both the defensive and offensive lines. They surprised everyone, going with a running back in West Virginia's Charles Sims. Perhaps it's a sign that the new Lovie Smith regime isn't completely sold on the feature back they inherited — Doug Martin.

Randle gets handled

Rueben Randle is an explosive playmaker, one who projects to make you say "wow" at least once a game. He's also proven to be unreliable, getting targeted on a team-high eight of Eli Manning's 27 interceptions last season. The Giants clearly weren't comfortable with Randle as the only option next to Victor Cruz, deciding to use the No. 12 overall pick on precision route-runner Odell Beckham Jr.

Fire sale at the law firm

BenJarvus Green-Ellis has scored 37 rushing touchdowns over the last four years, making him a viable fantasy player despite replacement-level talent. The Bengals put an end to that, selecting a massive "big back" upgrade in Jeremy Hill. The LSU product will quickly move ahead of BJGE at camp, settling in to the goal-line role as a change-of-pace complement to speedy Giovani Bernard.

Veteran winners

In contrast to those whose spots were challenged by rookie acquisitions, here are some veterans who won on Draft Day 2014:

- Zac Stacy, RB, Rams: Offensive lineman and draft choice Greg Robinson is an absolute mauler in the run game and Tre Mason isn't ready to pass protect at the NFL level yet.
- Adrien Robinson, TE, Giants: The Giants have now gone through free agency and the draft without addressing their hole at tight end.
- Montee Ball, RB, Broncos: The Broncos are all-in on Ball, declining to even use a single draft pick to try and replace running back Knowshon Moreno.

NBA draft lottery

The Cavs, Bucks and Sixers hold the top-3 picks in June's draft. The best fantasy prospects are also the best real-life prospects:

- Jabari Parker, SF, Duke: The offensively gifted forward reminds many of Carmelo Anthony with physical frame and shooting ability.
- Joel Embiid, C, Kansas: He is an incredibly raw player down low, yet still averaged 2.6 blocks and 8.1 rebounds as a freshman. He has a very high ceiling.
- Andrew Wiggins, SG, Kansas: He is a 1-on-1 player that excels in the open court with freakish athleticism. That's the NBA style of play in a nutshell.
